About Macao

Macao used to be a small fishing village on the south-eastern coast of China. Its oyster farming history gave it the old names of Hou Keng (Oyster Mirror) and Hou Keng Ou (Oyster Mirror Harbour). Legend has it that the origin of the names came from the oysters that shone like mirrors. Meanwhile, a Qianlong-era (1711-1799) record attributed the name to the mirror-like roundness of the two bays in the north and south.

The fate of the city was forever changed when Portuguese merchants and missionaries arrived in the mid-16th century. Upon landing, they asked the villagers for the name. The villagers thought they were referring to the temple, so they told them it was "Ma Kok". The Portuguese translated it into "Macau", giving the village a new name altogether. Macao's sovereignty was returned to China on December 20, 1999. The city has since become one of the two Special Administrative Regions (SAR), alongside Hong Kong.

The culture and architecture of Macao reflect centuries of cultural exchange between the East and West. The agglomeration of foreigners in the Historic Centre in the past has given rise to many character buildings. Its collection of Western-style buildings is the oldest in China and is listed as a UNESCO heritage site.

Underneath Macao's elegant shell is a lively soul. Traditional food stalls exist alongside fine dining restaurants and luxurious hotels. Cafés can be found on every corner. This energetic food scene along with Macanese cuisine has earned Macao the UNESCO title of "Creative City of Gastronomy".

Macao consists of the Macao Peninsula and the islands of Taipa and Coloane. Three bridges connect the peninsula and Taipa, while reclamation brings the two islands together. The area of Macao continues to expand, now spanning over 30 square kilometres. Despite its small size, it accommodates almost 700,000 people, making it one of the densest cities in the world. 90 percent of Macao population is Chinese, and the rest are Portuguese and Filipino. The official languages are Chinese and Portuguese, but most people can communicate in Cantonese, Mandarin and English.

Moreover, Macao also hosts a number of world-class events, such as Macau Grand Prix, Macao International Parade and Macao International Fireworks Display Contest. The city is bustling year round. Macao is also home to many internationally acclaimed entertainment venues. They are exquisitely decorated, well-equipped and conveniently connected to the hotels and shopping malls. The true colours of the city shine through in its contrast—between the humble character buildings and five-star hotels; small local shops and international luxury brands.

UNESCO World Heritage

The small area of Macao houses many historical gems. In particular, 22 buildings on the Macao Peninsula and their eight adjoining public squares were declared a UNESCO World Heritage site on July 15, 2005. Together, they are known as the Historic Centre of Macao. It gives people a glimpse into the lives of the Portuguese in the heyday. There is plenty of history contained in Macao for visitors to explore while the details are not explained for the limited area here.

Moorish Barracks

Constructed in the late 19th century on the slope of Barra Hill, the building features a design that combines Arabic and Gothic elements. In particular, verandas with pointed arches run along almost all sides of the building. The three-tier decorations between the Islamic-style arches and the arrangement of the square with pointed ornaments on the parapet walls have a beautiful flow.

📍 Calçada da Barra, Macao

🕒 9am-6pm (Veranda)

Mandarin's House

The building was built before 1869 and was the residence and family home of Chinese theoretician Zheng Guanying. It is a Chinese-style compound that features architectural influences from the West. The master's quarters consist of two traditional enclosed courtyard houses. Cross-cultural elements can be seen in the decorative motifs on the false ceilings and the concrete cladding.

📍 10 Travessa de António da Silva, Macao
(Opposite Largo do Lilau)

🕒 10am-6pm (last entry at 5.30pm); closed on Wednesdays except during public holidays.

Ruins of St Paul's

The Church of Mater Dei was built at the beginning of the 17th century. A fire in 1835 destroyed the church and the adjacent St. Paul's College. Only the church's façade, foundation and outside steps could be saved. The baroque-style façade also features Chinese characters and oriental chrysanthemum motifs. Following five years of archaeological and restoration work by the Macao government in the 1990s, the Sacred Art Museum and Crypt is now open to the public.

- 📍 Company of Jesus Square, Macao
- 🕒 The façade is accessible round the clock every day; Sacred Art Museum and Crypt—9am-6pm (last entry at 5.30pm); 9am-2pm on Tuesdays; open on public holidays; Ruins of St Paul's—9am-6pm (last entry at 5.30pm)

Cathedral

First completed around 1622, the Cathedral was rebuilt several times following severe typhoon damage. The main building has a sloping roof, supported by a wooden truss. The bell tower has three floors with a flat roof. The interior keeps its neoclassical design since its reconstruction in 1937. The Portuguese folding screens at the entrance, statues and stained glass windows are of great historical value. During the colonial days, every new governor would visit the Cathedral and place his sceptre, the symbol of authority, next to the statue of the Virgin Mary.

- 📍 1 Largo da Sé, Macao
- 🕒 7.30am-8pm

Lou Kau Mansion

Named after its former resident, a prominent merchant named Lou Kau, the mansion was believed to be built in 1889. The two-storey, traditional grey-brick courtyard house is organised in a three-by-three grid. Its architectural characteristics are typical of residential houses in the late Qing Dynasty. The interior blends influences from the East and West. Oriental elements are seen in the screens, carved bricks, roof statues, calligraphy banners and windows decorated with oyster shells. These are contrasted with Western features such as Portuguese-style windows, colourful glass and false ceilings.

- 📍 7 Travessa da Sé, Macao
- 🕒 10am-6pm (last entry at 5.30pm); closed on Mondays except during public holidays

Na Tcha Temple

The temple has a history of over 100 years and is dedicated to the worship of the deity Na Tcha, the son of mythical military commander Li Jing. It is a simple, single chamber building with brick walls and a traditional flush-gable roof. The building is painted grey with little ornamentation.

- 📍 Calçada de São Francisco Xavier, Macao (next to the Ruins of St Paul's)
- 🕒 Na Tcha Temple—8am-5pm; Na Tcha Exhibition Room—10am-6pm (last entry at 5.30pm); closed on Wednesdays except during public holidays

Guia Fortress (including Guia Chapel and Lighthouse)

Perched on the top of Guia Hill, the fortress overlooks the Macao Peninsula. It was a restricted military zone until 1976 when the Portuguese army left Macao. The lighthouse built in the 19th century was the first modern lighthouse on the Chinese coast, and its location is the official geographic coordinates of Macao. The chapel was built in the 17th century. Its fresco paintings were created with Chinese techniques, another example of Macao's multiculturalism.

- 📍 Guia Hill, Macao
- 🕒 Fortress—9am-5pm (last entry at 5:30pm); Chapel—10am-5pm; Lighthouse not open to the public

A-Ma Temple

The oldest existing temple in Macao, A-Ma Temple consists of the Gate Pavilion, the Memorial Arch, the Prayer Hall, the Hall of Benevolence, the Hall of Guanyin, and Zhengjiao Chanlin (a Buddhist pavilion). Each forms a small part of the well-ordered complex which sits in perfect harmony with its surrounding nature. Exquisite craftsmanship can be observed in the lattice windows, upturned roof ridges, roof charms, flush gable roof and decorative porcelain pieces.

- 📍 Barra Square, Macao
- 🕒 9am-5pm

"Leal Senado" Building (The Current IAM Building)

The building was constructed in 1784 and served as Macao's original municipal chamber. It has since undergone multiple rounds of renovation. Southern Europe influence is apparent in its white walls, dark green door and window frames, blue and white tiles and Baroque-style lintels. The upper floor of the two-storey building houses a ceremonial meeting room. It leads to a library styled after the library of Mafra Convent in Portugal, which contains a broad collection of historical Portuguese volumes on Africa and the Far East.

- 📍 163 Avenida de Almeida Ribeiro, Macao
- 🕒 Building—9am-9pm; Gallery—9am-9pm (open to the public when there is an exhibition)

Sam Kai Vui Kun (Kuan Tai Temple)

Constructed in the Qianlong era (1711-1799) of the Qing Dynasty (1636-1912), the building was originally a meeting place for businessmen. At the venue, there is temple worshipping Kuan Tai (or Guan Yu, a general in ancient China) and the God of Wealth, so it is also known as Kwan Tai Temple. Its function as a meeting place used to co-exist with its worshipping purpose, but now serves only as a temple.

- 📍 Rua Sul do Mercado de São Domingos, Macao
- 🕒 9am-6pm

Holy House of Mercy

Holy House of Mercy is a charitable organisation founded by D. Belchior Carneiro, the first Bishop of Macao. The building was constructed in the mid-18th century with bricks and granite. With the exception of the granite baseline of the ground floor arches, the whole building is painted white, giving it a touch of elegance and solemnity. It features elaborate decorations of a variety of styles. Artefacts of the organisation and the Catholic Church are displayed in the museum.

- 📍 2 Travessa da Misericórdia, Macao (Senado Square)
- 🕒 Museum—10am-1pm and 2.30pm-5.30pm; closed on Mondays and public holidays

St. Joseph's Seminary and Church

The seminary was founded in the 18th century by Jesuit missionaries. The church adjacent to it was the second largest in Macao when it was first built, after the original Church of Mater Dei (Ruins of St Paul's). The humble-looking seminary is contrasted against the extravagant Baroque-style church. The church's altars are lavishly decorated. A broken pediment, typical of baroque architecture, tops the main entrance. In one of the lateral altars lies one of Macao's most precious religious relics, a piece of arm bone from St. Francis Xavier. The seminary houses a great number of religious artefacts, such as oil paintings and statues. Part of the collection can be viewed at the Treasure of Sacred Art of St. Joseph's Seminary.

- 📍 Rua do Seminário, Macao
- 🕒 Church—10am-5pm; Treasure of Sacred Art of St. Joseph's Seminary—10am-5pm; closed on Wednesdays except during public holidays; St Joseph's Seminary is closed to the public

Dom Pedro V Theatre

Built in the 19th century, Dom Pedro V Theatre was the first western-style theatre in China and served as an important event venue for the Portuguese in the olden days. The façade is painted green, complementing the door and window frames of a darker shade. The red roof and yellow interior provide an eye-catching contrast. The theatre is neoclassical in design, incorporating a rectilinear plan. The foyer leads to a circular auditorium and the stage. Stairs on the sides lead to a crescent-shaped balcony.

- 📍 St. Augustine's Square, Macao
- 🕒 10am-6pm; closed on Tuesdays except during public holidays

Flavours of Macao

It's impossible to categorise Macao into one type of food since the region is quite literally a melting pot of cultures and cuisines. From humble street snacks and traditional family restaurants tucked away in nooks and crannies, to world-class restaurants, artisanal cafés and avant-garde dining, there's plenty to explore while you're here. If you're looking to get a true taste of Macao, there's no better way to do it than by eating around.

Crab congee and crispy dace balls

Bordering the Pearl River estuary, Macao has easy access to an abundant supply of freshwater crabs. These plump crustaceans are best enjoyed in congee, where every grain of rice is seeped with the flavours of its sweet and savoury roe. For textural contrast, order the dace balls, which are coated in chopped vermicelli and are deep-fried until they're crisp, fragrant and golden brown.

Steamed rice rolls with eggs and shallots

Steamed rice rolls may be a common snack in Cantonese-speaking regions, but this particular version is unique to Macao. This local speciality is made by pouring a rice-flour mixture over a cloth and steaming it with shallots and beaten eggs. Expertly rolled and cut into bite-sized pieces, the finished product bears a close resemblance to Japan's tamagoyaki omelette. Smooth and wonderfully fragrant on its own, these egg-enhanced rice rolls are even more delicious when eaten with accompanying condiments like soy sauce, sweet sauce and sesame sauce.

Pork chop bun

So much more than your regular ham sandwich, Macao's famed pork chop bun is a delicacy that can be prepared in many different ways. Individual restaurants have their own preference for breads—you can find everything from crusty loaves to pillowy soft white bread to even pineapple buns—but the most popular is probably a baguette-style roll that's crunchy on the outside and soft on the inside. The slab of pork nestled in between is thick and juicy, soaked in a Portuguese marinade that makes it deliciously tender and flavourful.

Portuguese egg tart

No trip to Macao is complete without a Portuguese egg tart. British entrepreneur Andrew Stow popularised this sweet treat by modifying Portugal's pastel de nata to give it a distinctly Macanese flavour. While similar to other egg tarts in shape, these pastries have cinnamon, lemon zest and sugar added to their custard fillings, resulting in their blistered, crème brûlée-like finish that appears after being baked in the oven. Even richer than its Cantonese counterpart, the smooth and creamy custard is housed in a pastry shell that's indulgently crisp and flakey.

Milk pudding with ginger

Originally from Daliang of China's Shunde district, these simple yet satisfying puddings have gained immense popularity in Macao. They're made by adding ginger juice to milk that's been boiled and cooled. The result is a smooth and aromatic pudding rich in milky flavour. This dish is so revered that some establishments have gone the extra mile by setting up their own dairy farms to create the perfect milk pudding.

Traditional ice cream

Nowadays, ice cream comes in infinite flavours and can be served in all shapes, sizes and styles, but we'll always have a soft spot for the classics. In Macao, there are several spots that still churn ice cream the old-fashioned way. At Lai Kei, for example, not only are the red bean popsicles, ice cream blocks and ice cream sandwiches delicious, the retro packaging—featuring a drawing of a young girl has become synonymous with the store—is also a whimsical draw. There's also Gelatina Mok Yi Kei, famous for its agar agar as well as its musang king durian ice cream. Last but not least, be sure to visit Hung Heng Cocos, which specialises in small-batch, handmade coconut ice cream.

Shrimp roe noodles

This beloved dish packs a massive punch in the flavour department. A restaurant that is serious about this dish abstains from using automated machinery. The traditional way of making these noodles is to hand-knead the dough with a bamboo pole. The eggy, toothsome noodles topped with freshly roasted shrimp roe are served in a dried flounder broth full of umami.

Portuguese cuisine

Macao is home to some of the best and most authentic Portuguese food outside of Portugal. Located on the west coast of the Iberian Peninsula, Portugal is known for using a lot of fresh seafood and olive oil in its cooking. Popular dishes include salted cod cakes, sardines cooked in olive oil and seafood stews with bread. You'll find these dishes and other Portuguese favourites served at all sorts of establishments in Macao, from small, family-run eateries to high-end restaurants.

Macanese cuisine

When the Portuguese travelled to Asia hundreds of years ago, they brought with them their own national dishes and cooking styles but also discovered many of Asia's unique ingredients and spices along the way. After settling in Macao, many became influenced by the local food and flavours and married them with their own hometown staples to create a new cuisine that has now become distinct to the region. For a true taste of Macao, try classic dishes such as African chicken, Portuguese chicken and duck stew.

Buffet

Macao is home to some of the top hotels in the world, with new brands arriving on a regular basis. As a result, the region is host to a range of hotel buffets, with offerings to suit all budgets and tastes. Whether you're looking for all-you-can-eat oysters, salads, seafood, meats or sashimi, Macao has everything to keep you sated. Some of these buffets are extremely popular, so it's always best to book ahead.

Macanese restaurants

Restaurante Litoral

Set in a charming, two-storey house, Litoral traces its lineage to one of the first generation of restaurants specialising in Macanese-style Portuguese cuisine. Elements from the east and the west can be found throughout the restaurant, from the Chinese porcelain vases that adorn the space to distinctly Portuguese wood carvings. Many dishes at this family-run restaurant have been passed down from several generations. Signature offerings include stewed duck, African chicken and stuffed squid.

☎ (853) 2882 5255

La Famiglia

With its European furnishings, wine cellar and warm and welcoming atmosphere, this restaurant feels like a typical Macanese family home. The dining area is spread across the ground level and the first floor while the second floor is reserved for private functions, and the third floor houses the bar. While you're here, be sure to try the "sapateira" stuffed crab, fried shrimps with garlic-butter sauce, sautéed clams with white wine sauce, bacalhau à brás, Portuguese suckling pig and other delicious delights.

📍 76 Rua dos Clérigos, Taipa
☎ (853) 2857 6131

Riquexó Café

Riquexó Café may not have the snazziest appearance, but it's still a household name in Macao thanks to its delicious food and cosy, home-style atmosphere. The shop's Chinese-Portuguese owners cook up cheap and cheerful Macanese fare made according to their family's secret recipes. The "feijoada" pork with bean stew, curry chicken and minchi are all highly recommended.

Photo opportunities have now become a factor in a destination's popularity. In Macao, every street corner makes for a good photo opportunity. Within the historical European architecture are cultural spots where the city's Portuguese heritage shines through, as well as modern marvels that perfectly reflect the contemporary side of Macao.

Rua da Felicidade (Happiness Street)

Old brothel buildings line the street of this former red-light district. The red houses with Chinese window frames and traditional signboards give it a unique feel. It is where films Isabella and Butterfly were shot.

Albergue da Santa Casa da Misericórdia (Holy House of Mercy Albergue)

The albergue consists of two yellow Portuguese houses standing in front of a small courtyard, overlooked by an old camphor tree. It used to be a sanctuary for comb sisters—women who choose to stay single all their life—but had also given shelter to those in need. The houses have now been transformed into an art and culture space. Nearby, another European heritage building houses Pavilhão de Exposições e Espectáculos Artísticos para Jovens. It serves as an art and exhibition space for youth and hosts events such as concerts and exhibitions from time to time.

Coloane Village

At the southern tip of Macao, Coloane retains much of its fishing village ambience around the pier area. There are several dry goods stores along the promenade and the smell of salted fish penetrates the streets as the wind blows. Villagers can be seen chatting in front of their humble but cosy cottages. Other attractions on the island include Chapel of St. Francis Xavier and Tam Kong Temple.

Outdoor Adventures

Why stay in an air-conditioned room when the sun is out? The natural environment of Macao is just as splendid as the luxurious hotels and casinos. A walk in the tree-lined paths in the country parks will instantly relieve all of life's stress. Another delightful spot to take a stroll through is the Old Taipa Village. The well-maintained Portuguese buildings there have witnessed the tremendous change in Macao over the decades. There is always something different to explore across seasons and throughout the day.

Macao Giant Panda Pavilion and Pavilion of Rare Animals

The Giant Panda Pavilion in Seac Pai Van Park houses Kai Kai, Xin Xin and their children, Jian Jian and Kang Kang. The pavilion is designed to mimic the pandas' natural habitat. Natural light is channelled through the translucent seashell-shaped roof in the indoor section. A rock wall, pools, tree branches and other features are also incorporated to cater to their daily activities. Visitors can view the panda family through the glass. The nearby Pavilion of Rare Animals is where red pandas Luo Luo and Tong Tong are accommodated.

Hac Sá Long Chao Kok Coastal Trail

The linear walking path in Coloane connects Rua de Hac Sá Long Chao Kok and the villas of Cheoc Van. There are plenty of rocks of interesting shapes along the way. People have identified them as taking the form of different animals and named them accordingly over the years such as ape rock, lizard rock and eagle rock. The path overlooks Lingding Channel and offers a mesmerising view from dawn to dusk. Along the way, there is a traditional Chinese pavilion where visitors can take a break and listen to the sounds of the sea.

Taipa Houses

Taipa Houses refer to a complex of five buildings built in the 1920s. They are typical examples of Portuguese architecture in Macao. One of them has been revitalised into “Macanese Living Museum”, while the others now host exhibitions and sell books. The white lines on the houses contrast nicely against the pastel green base. The door and window frames are decorated with delicate carving. The furniture inside blends influences from the East and West and reflects the lives of the Portuguese and Macanese in the olden days. A beautiful mangrove swamp nearby further adds to the charm.

Traditional festivals and mega events

Macao is a lively city: there is not a month without festivals or events. Visit Macao anytime and it will always be bustling. Chinese festivals exist alongside Catholic traditions in the multicultural society of Macao. The many mega carnivals further add to the festive ambience of the city.

FEB

Chinese New Year

Chinese New Year is a busy time for many families. People flock to the shop to get new clothes and shoes before New Year's Day. Houses are cleaned from top to bottom, red couplets are put up, and a feast is prepared. The festive atmosphere always spreads across the entire city, with exquisitely decorated malls and lion dances in the streets. During the festival, people will put on their new garments to greet relatives and friends at their places. Apart from traditional celebrations, Macao also hosts a parade and fireworks show during Chinese New Year.

Procession of the Passion of Our Lord, the God Jesus

A major event for the Catholic population in Macao, the procession takes place on the first Saturday and Sunday of Lent. It commemorates the journey where Jesus carried the cross up Calvary, as depicted in the Bible. Clergy members in purple gowns lead the solemn procession through multiple landmarks and streets. The tradition first arrived in Macao in the 16th century from southern Europe and has now become an integral part of the city's culture.

Drunken Dragon Festival

The Drunken Dragon Festival is celebrated by the fishmongers of Macao. On the evening of the seventh day of the fourth month of the lunar calendar, they would gather in the market and sit around the table to dine. The tradition has evolved into the "longevity rice" feast. During the festival, fishmongers wave the wooden dragons on the incense burner table to pray for peace and fortune in the trade. Now, it has become a tradition for Sam Kai Vui Kun to host a joyous ceremony on the day of the festival, where lion and dragon dances are performed and longevity rice is given away.

MAY

Procession of Our Lady of Fátima

The procession takes place each year on May 13, with the participation of the Bishop of the Diocese of Macao, clergy members and a number of local and foreign faithful. They walk from the St. Dominic's Church to the Penha Chapel, reciting the Rosary and singing hymns along the way. It also features three children in traditional Portuguese costumes, symbolising the shepherds who witnessed the apparitions of the Virgin Mary. The procession celebrates the Apparition in Fátima, Portugal and has become a tradition in Macao since 1929.

JUN
The 5th day of the 5th
lunar month

Dragon Boat Festival

The festival commemorates the death of patriotic poet Qu Yuan, who drowned himself in the river.

When people took their boats out to rescue him, they threw rice dumplings into the river so the fish would not eat him. Over time, it has evolved into the Dragon Boat Festival where rice dumplings are eaten and dragon boat races are held. Macao International Dragon Boat Races have become an important sport event. Athletes gather at Nam Van Lake, drums are beaten and flags are flown. It is an energetic festival with a lot to see and do.

Museum of Sacred Art and Crypt

In the 1990s, the government of Macao embarked on an archaeological excavation and restoration project on the Ruins of Saint Paul's, and the Museum of Sacred Art and Crypt was built in the place of the church's chancel. The remains of a tomb lie in the centre of the crypt, which is surrounded by walls adorned with the relics of Japanese and Vietnamese martyrs. The museum is located next to the crypt and contains fascinating art pieces and artefacts from churches across Macao.

Recommended Souvenirs

No trip is complete without souvenir shopping. Macao boasts plenty of unique items that make great mementos to be shared with friends and family. From traditional Chinese snacks and pastries to Portuguese canned goods and wines, you're bound to find something to help commemorate your trip. Leave some room in your suitcase!

Chinese snacks

In Macao, it's easy to find souvenirs that reflect the city's Chinese cultural heritage. The most popular items in this respect are traditional Chinese snacks. The varieties are endless and include delicious nibbles such as almond cookies, beef jerky, egg rolls, peanut candies and nougats, among many others. These treats are sold everywhere, from large-scale chains to time-honoured stores and family-run shops. For a truly unique snack, be sure to visit Pastelaria Chui Heong. Its almond cookies are unlike any other, containing whole almonds that are roasted over a charcoal fire for a deliciously smoky aroma.

Canned seafood

Loja das Conservas Macau specialises in canned seafood from Portugal. You'll find a wide range of gourmet tinned catch, including sardines, tuna, mackerel, squid, octopus and cod roe. Many are packed with herbs and seasonings for greater flavour. The store imports products from different conserveiras in Portugal and even offers limited-edition cans that are hard to come by anywhere else. Like the store itself, the canned goods boast cool and trendy designs, making them great choices for souvenirs.

📍 9 Travessa do Aterro Novo, Macao

Portuguese wines

Forget French wines—Portugal also produces some truly amazing vino and is home to a number of wine regions. Aside from your typical reds and whites, the city of Porto in the northern part of the country is famed for a sweet fortified wine known as Port. During its 400-year rule, the Portuguese has made its wine culture an integral part of Macao, and this legacy continues to thrive to this day. If you want a taste, you can easily find a bottle to enjoy with loved ones.

Lemon King

Specialising in preserved snacks, Lemon King is a beloved old-time brand originating from Hong Kong. Relatives of the founder established a separate brand in Macao. The store's signature liquorice lemon is made with Thai limes and boasts a refreshingly sweet and zesty flavour. Other popular items include preserved ginger, dried plums, liquorice olives and other mouth-watering snacks.

Pastelaria Han Van

Shrimp roe noodles may be common, but the type sold at Pastelaria Han Van are one of a kind. While most places only mix the roe into the noodles, Han Van goes a step further by smearing a thick layer of roe onto every bundle of noodles, resulting in a product that's amped up in both taste and aroma. There's also no alkaline water in the noodles. Instead, the al dente texture rely solely on shrimp roe, and the dried flounder broth for flavour.

Soda Panda

Created in Macao, Soda Panda tells the story of a lovable cartoon panda family who moves from its home in Sichuan to live in Macao. Fun-loving and curious, the three cubs of the family come across a magic bubble bath that encourages them to venture beyond the Giant Panda Pavilion to embark on all sorts of fun adventures around the city. Soda Panda is a great example of Macao's boundless creativity, and its merchandise can be found at plenty of tourist destinations, from Macau Tower to Cunha Bazaar and even the Macau International Airport.

Tong Iec Pak Fa Fui

Founded more than 100 years ago, Pak Fa Fui is best known for its four signature products: preserved apricots, preserved ginger, dried mango and sweetened vinegar. The apricots have reached cult status with locals and visitors alike. Not only are they still made the traditional way, but they're also sold in charming retro-esque boxes that have been adorned with the same goddess illustration throughout the years. Grab a box for a taste of nostalgia.

Climate

Macao's climate is temperate throughout the year. The average temperature is about 23°C (73°F), ranging from 20°C (68°F) to 26°C (79°F). It is rather humid, with the average relative humidity reaching 79%. The rainy season lasts from May to September. October and November are the ideal months to visit Macao, with mild temperatures and dry weather. It is often sunny in the winter months from December to March although it can be a little bit cold. Temperatures begin to climb in April and the heat becomes more intense from May to September. There can be typhoons and when Typhoon Signal no. 8 or above is hoisted, ferries and flights will stop running temporarily. The typhoon season in Macao is from May to November, with July, August and September being the most seriously affected months.

Bureaux de change

Currency exchange in Macao is easy. The service is available at the airport, piers and most hotels. There are also plenty of banks and bureaux de change on Macao streets. Electronic transactions are common and broadly accepted credit cards include China UnionPay, American Express, JCB, Visa and Mastercard. However, transaction fees from the card-issuing banks may apply. Alipay is also becoming more common.

Communication and WIFI

International roaming is available in Macao but a hefty charge may apply. A more economical option is to buy a pay-as-you-go sim with internet access. They are readily available at convenience stores. WIFI services are common in Macao. In public areas, mobile devices can be connected to "FreeWiFi. MO" with no additional charge. Real name registration is required for new prepaid card users to activate the service.
